The Client wants to offer custom made container products on its new B2C Commerce storefront. The Client provided two business requirements.

* Customer can specify container length, width, and height.

* Customer can specify the material that the container is made of.

The Client also provided the Architect a current data schema (shown below) for reference while preparing the technical documentation.

Which two gaps between the requirements and the data schema should the Architect discuss with the Client?

Choose 2 answers

- A. The data schema includes an implied structure that the customer's choices should be captured as custom objects, but there isn't a business requirement to do so
- B. The data schema includes unique identifiers for material and color fields, but neither are reflected in the business requirements.
- C. The data schema includes a Color_ID field, but there isn't a business requirement to allow the customer to specify container color.
- D. The data schema includes a material Price_Markup field, but there isn't a business requirement to factor the material cost into the final price calculation.

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

The provided data schema includes several fields that do not match the stated business requirements, which focus on the custom dimensions and materials of the containers:

* Option A: The inclusion of unique identifiers for materials and color fields in the data schema suggests a level of detail and structure around these attributes that is not reflected in the business requirements. If the business does not require tracking or differentiating materials beyond just naming them, this might be unnecessarily complex.

* Option D: The data schema includes a Color_ID field, which implies the ability to specify the color of the container.
