- A. Proxy response
- B. Case-mixed adjustment
- C. Bias or mode effects
- D. Recall base

NEW QUESTION # 658

Which of the following is the role a healthcare quality professional should play in strategic planning?

- A. Identify causes of lost revenue.
- B. Review and redefine annual objectives.
- C. Provide data on performance indicators.
- D. Develop the vision, mission, and goals.

Answer: C

Explanation:

In strategic planning, healthcare quality professionals play a key role by providing data on performance indicators (Answer A). These indicators include metrics such as patient outcomes, process efficiency, patient satisfaction, and adherence to clinical guidelines. By offering data-driven insights, healthcare quality professionals help the organization make informed decisions, prioritize initiatives, and align resources with strategic goals.

The other options, while important, are not the primary role of a healthcare quality professional in strategic planning:

* Reviewing and redefining annual objectives (B) is typically a responsibility of leadership or management teams who use the performance data provided by quality professionals to adjust goals.

* Developing the vision, mission, and goals (C) is generally the task of the organization's leadership, although quality professionals may provide input based on data.

* Identifying causes of lost revenue (D) is often part of financial management and not the direct responsibility of a healthcare quality professional, though their data may support this analysis.

Which of the following is NOT out of those steps?

- A. Identify the value stream
- B. Let the customer pull the product

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 660

An interdisciplinary team met to review readmission rates at a health system. Issues were identified with communication across care providers. The team is interested in improving the coordination of care process and is now reviewing four candidates to serve in the role of process champion:

Of the four candidates, which represents the most effective choice to serve as a process champion?

- A. Candidate D
- B. Candidate B
- C. Candidate C
- D. Candidate A

Answer: B

Explanation:

Candidate B is the most effective choice to serve as a process champion. This candidate has a high level of interest, is respected as an opinion leader, and has some involvement with the current process. Although their authority to mobilize resources is low, their influence and interest in the project make them well-suited to champion the process. A process champion needs to have respect and credibility within the organization, which Candidate B has, along with sufficient involvement to understand the challenges and drive change.

* Candidate A (A): While Candidate A has high involvement and interest, they lack authority and are not a respected opinion leader, which are critical qualities for a process champion.

* Candidate C (C): Although Candidate C has high authority, their low involvement, interest, and moderate respectability make them less effective as a champion.

* Candidate D (D): Candidate D has some involvement and respectability but lacks interest and authority, making them less suitable for the role.

NEW QUESTION # 661

A healthcare system has multiple medical clinics across a large geographic area. What is the best way to deliver education to assure continuous survey readiness?

- A. mandatory modules on accreditation standards
- B. one-on-one sessions with noncompliant employees
- C. just-in-time training to the highest risk clinics
- D. train the trainer sessions with clinic managers

Answer: D

Explanation:

In a healthcare system with multiple medical clinics across a large geographic area, the best way to ensure continuous survey readiness is to conduct "train the trainer" sessions with clinic managers. This method leverages the expertise of clinic managers, who can then disseminate the training and knowledge to their respective teams. It ensures consistency across clinics, allows for local adaptation, and facilitates ongoing readiness. Clinic managers are in a good position to monitor compliance and provide just-in-time training as needed.

* Mandatory modules on accreditation standards (B): While useful, this method may not be as effective in ensuring consistent and practical application across multiple sites.

* One-on-one sessions with noncompliant employees (C): This approach is resource-intensive and reactive rather than proactive.

* Just-in-time training to the highest risk clinics (D): While this can be effective in specific situations, it does not provide a comprehensive approach to continuous readiness across all clinics.
