- A. Applicable privacy legislation
- B. Available technology platforms
- C. Applicable control frameworks

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

The applicable privacy legislation needs to be identified first to define the privacy requirements to use when assessing the selection of IT systems, because it sets the legal obligations and standards for the organization to comply with when processing personal data. The type of data, the control frameworks, and the technology platforms are all dependent on the privacy legislation that applies to the organization and its data processing activities. Therefore, the privacy legislation is the primary source of privacy requirements for IT systems.

Accelerometer data is a type of personal information that can be collected by a mobile application without consent, according to some studies and reports. Accelerometer data measures the movement and orientation of the device, and can be used for various purposes, such as fitness tracking, gaming, navigation, and authentication. However, accelerometer data can also reveal sensitive information about the user's behavior, activity, location, and identity, without their knowledge or permission. For example, some researchers have shown that accelerometer data can be used to infer the user's gender, age, health condition, personality traits, and even passwords. Therefore, accelerometer data poses a significant privacy risk for mobile users, and there is a lack of clear and consistent regulations and guidelines on how to collect, use, and protect this type of data.
