NEW QUESTION # 124

The QoS should be planned according to service requirements. Generally, a service with a higher priority adopts the () scheduling mode.

- A. PQ
- B. DRR
- C. RR
- D. WRR

Answer: A

Explanation:

Huawei QoS describes PQ (Priority Queuing) as the strict-priority scheduler ensuring that high-priority queues are served first before lower-priority queues. WRR/DRR/RR are weighted or round-robin modes intended for fair sharing and do not guarantee strict preemption for latency-sensitive traffic. Therefore, PQ is selected for higher-priority services (e.g., voice, control).

NEW QUESTION # 125

In Huawei U2000, when adding network elements, you can only add them one-by-one while accessing each network element.

- A. Wrong
- B. Right

Answer: A

Explanation:

This statement is wrong. In U2000, network elements (NEs) can be added by multiple methods, including batch addition/import and automatic discovery, not just one-by-one during a live access session. U2000 supports template-based onboarding and batch operations to improve efficiency for large-scale deployments.
