NEW QUESTION # 107
Which of the following is NOT a tracking option? (Select three)

- A. Network log
- B. Log
- C. Partial log
- D. Full log

Answer: A,C,D

Explanation:

The options that are not tracking options are Partial log, Network log, and Full log. Tracking options are settings that determine how the Security Gateway handles traffic that matches a rule in the security policy. The valid tracking options are Log, Detailed Log, Extended Log, Alert, Mail, SNMP trap, User Defined Alert, and None. The other options are incorrect. Log is a tracking option that records basic information about the traffic, such as source, destination, service, action, etc. Detailed Log is a tracking option that records additional information about the traffic, such as NAT details, data amount, etc. Extended Log is a tracking option that records even more information about the traffic, such as matched IPS protections, application details, etc. [Logging and Monitoring Administration Guide R80 - Check Point Software]

NEW QUESTION # 110
What are the three deployment options available for a security gateway?

- A. Remote, Standalone, and Distributed
- B. Bridge Mode, Remote, and Standalone
- C. Standalone, Distributed, and Bridge Mode
- D. Distributed, Bridge Mode, and Remote

Answer: C

Explanation:
A security gateway is a device that enforces the security policy on the traffic that passes through it. There are three deployment options available for a security gateway: Standalone, Distributed, and Bridge Mode. Standalone means that the security gateway and the security management server are installed on the same machine. Distributed means that the security gateway and the security management server are installed on separate machines.Bridge Mode means that the security gateway acts as a transparent bridge between two network segments, without changing the IP addressing scheme1.
