Cisco Implementing Cisco Enterprise Wireless Networks Sample Questions (Q318-Q323):

NEW QUESTION # 318

WPA2 Enterprise with 802.1X is being used for clients to authenticate to a wireless network through a Cisco ISE server. For security reasons, the network engineer wants to ensure that only PEAP authentication is used. The engineer sent instructions to clients on how to configure the supplicants, but the ISE logs still show users authenticating using EAP-FAST. Which action ensures that access to the network is restricted for these users unless the correct authentication mechanism is configured?

- A. Enable AAA override on the SSID and configure an access policy in Cisco ISE that allows access only when the EAP authentication method is PEAP.
- B. Enable AAA override on the SSID and configure an ACL on the WLC that allows access to users with IP addresses from a specific subnet.
- C. Enable AAA override on the SSID, gather the usernames of these users, and disable the RADIUS accounts until the devices are correctly configured.
- D. Enable AAA override on the SSID and configure an access policy in Cisco ISE that denies access to the list of MACs that have used EAP-FAST.

Answer: A

Explanation:

To ensure that only PEAP authentication is used for network access through a wireless network using WPA2 Enterprise with 802.1X, enabling AAA override on an SSID allows individual client authentication requests to be modified by RADIUS server responses dynamically. By configuring an access policy in Cisco Identity Services Engine (ISE) that permits access solely when PEAP is used as the EAP authentication method, any user attempting to authenticate using EAP-FAST will be denied network access until their devices are configured correctly for PEAP usage.
