PMI Agile Certified Practitioner (PMI-ACP)® Sample Questions (Q68-Q73):

NEW QUESTION # 68

A client needs to release their product to market earlier than planned. They need to start receiving the expected revenue, according to their financial forecast, which will require completing the work left on all user stories in the backlog. What should the project lead do to accommodate this request?

- A. Review the burn up chart to make predictions of how many iterations left are required to complete user stories left and make required adjustments to finish earlier.
- B. Ensure the team focus on completing the current items in the backlog and do not accept any request for changes.
- C. Review the burn down chart to make predictions of how many iterations left are required to complete user stories left and make required adjustments to finish earlier.
- D. Work with the product owner to launch a minimum viable product (MVP) and focus on completing only this portion of work by the new deadline.

Answer: D

Explanation:

When the client needs to release the product earlier than planned to start receiving revenue, the best way to accommodate this request is by focusing on delivering a minimum viable product (MVP). The MVP allows the team to prioritize the most essential features that provide value to the customer, ensuring that the product can be launched quickly, while still addressing the core needs of the business.

By focusing on the MVP, the product can still be launched on time, and the client can start receiving revenue sooner without waiting for the full product to be completed. This aligns with agile principles of delivering valuable, incremental releases.

NEW QUESTION # 69

A seven-member agile team's composition varies considerably in age, gender, culture, personality type, and professional background. When planning a team-building event, what type of interpersonal skills should the project leader use?

- A. Leadership
- B. Communication
- C. Networking
- D. Social awareness

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 70

A project team meets to estimate user stories for a sprint. While an important non-functional requirement must be delivered in the sprint, the estimate exceeds sprint capacity. What should the team do?

- A. Estimate only functional requirements that will impact product quality
- B. Refer the issue to the product owner
- C. Break non-functional requirements into those that can be delivered in the given sprint
- D. Add team resources

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 71

An agile team lead noticed their team's velocity was slowing down. They did not deliver a working software during the last iteration and there have been miscommunications between team members.

What should the agile team lead do at the end of this iteration?

- A. Focus on performance in the retrospective, then present performance indices and validate with the team.
- B. Start using feedback loops in every sprint to reevaluate project and team performance.
- C. Emphasize business requirements and investigate the pair-programming approach
- C. Run a spike at the end of the sprint to investigate the issue and reduce project risk.

Answer: B

Explanation:

When an agile team's velocity is slowing down, it is essential to regularly evaluate and adjust how the team is performing. By using feedback loops in every sprint, the team lead can continuously assess the team's progress, identify bottlenecks, and address issues early on. These feedback loops, typically discussed in sprint retrospectives, provide an opportunity for the team to identify the root causes of challenges, such as miscommunications, and make improvements to ensure better performance in future iterations. This approach promotes ongoing reflection and adaptation, which are core principles of Agile.

NEW QUESTION # 72

An agile practitioner is in the process of refining requirements. The requirements keep changing based upon with whom the agile practitioner speaks.

What should the agile practitioner do in this situation?

- A. Ask the scrum master to help reduce the rate of change.
- B. Work with the agile coach to document the requirements in a collaborative way.
- C. Work with the stakeholder directly rather than go through different layers of people.
- D. Work with the development team to confirm the requirements.

Answer: C
