- A. Block

- B. File
- C. HDFS
- D. Object

Answer: B,C,D

Explanation:

OceanStor Pacific provides support for object storage, file storage, and HDFS (Hadoop Distributed File System), making it versatile for handling large-scale unstructured data and big data applications. However, it does not natively support block storage, which is typically handled by other types of storage systems, such as SAN solutions.

NEW QUESTION # 17

Post-process deduplication and compression are more suitable for SSD storage.

- A. FALSE
- B. TRUE

Answer: A

Explanation:

Inline deduplication and compression are generally more suitable for SSD storage because they reduce the amount of data written to the SSDs in real-time, extending the lifespan of the SSDs and improving performance. Post-process deduplication and compression, on the other hand, are performed after data is written, which can increase write amplification and reduce SSD lifespan, making them less ideal for SSD storage.
