IDPX PRACTICE TEST QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

In surveying existing conditions of an older building before beginning space planning, an interior designer would probably need to seek expert consulting assistance to determine the

- A. existence of floor-mounted electrical outlets in an open space
- B. number of supply air diffusers in the space
- C. feasibility of opening a double-wide doorway in an existing wall
- D. presence of adequate water pressure to add a sink in a washroom

feasibility of opening a double-wide doorway in an existing wall

Which of the following statements is NOT true regarding the relationship between the designer and the consultants?

- A. The consultants become responsible for compliance with applicable codes by signing their drawings.
- B. The interior designer is the prime consultant and is liable to the owner for the consultant's work.
- C. The interior designer should involve the consultants late in the design development phase to ensure the client's approval on the design before moving forward.
- D. The interior designer is responsible for informing the consultants about the applicable code requirements for a job.

The interior designer should involve the consultants late in the design development phase to ensure the client's approval on the design before moving forward.

The client loves the look of a celebrity designer's crystal light fixture and wants it incorporated into the hotel lobby design. The cost of the fixtures is 50% of the total project budget for that area.

The hotel designer finds a local artisan who can custom create something similar for a fraction of the cost, thereby providing the look the client wants and staying within budget.

This would be an example of?

- A. base bid specification or equal specification
  - B. value engineering
  - C. integrated project delivery
  - D. competitive bidding
- value engineering

CIDQ Interior Design Professional Exam Sample Questions (Q104-Q109):

NEW QUESTION # 104

What deliverables are the responsibility of the interior designer in the design development phase?

- A. Power and data plans, floor plans with partition types
- B. Power and data plans, reflected ceiling plans with sprinkler head locations
- C. Reflected ceiling plans with fixture types, floor plans with partition types
- D. Floor plans, reflected ceiling plans with HVAC ductwork layout

Answer: C

Explanation:

The NCIDQ IDPX exam tests the designer's understanding of the design development phase, which involves refining the schematic design into detailed drawings and specifications. The interior designer's deliverables in this phase focus on elements within their scope, such as spatial layouts and finishes.

* Option A (Power and data plans, floor plans with partition types): Power and data plans are typically the responsibility of the electrical engineer, not the interior designer, although the designer coordinates these elements. Floor plans with partition types are correct, but this option is incomplete without other key deliverables.

* Option B (Floor plans, reflected ceiling plans with HVAC ductwork layout): Floor plans are a correct deliverable, but reflected ceiling plans with HVAC ductwork layout are typically prepared by the mechanical engineer. The interior designer specifies ceiling finishes and fixture types, not HVAC ductwork.

* Option C (Reflected ceiling plans with fixture types, floor plans with partition types): This is the correct choice. In the design development phase, the interior designer is responsible for floor plans with partition types (defining spatial layouts and wall constructions) and reflected ceiling plans with fixture types (e.g., lighting, diffusers), which specify the design intent for ceiling elements. These deliverables are within the designer's scope and critical for this phase.

* Option D (Power and data plans, reflected ceiling plans with sprinkler head locations): Power and data plans are the electrical engineer's responsibility, and sprinkler head locations are typically specified by the fire protection engineer. While the designer coordinates these elements, they are not the designer's deliverables.

Verified Answer from Official Source:

The correct answer is verified from NCIDQ's official study materials on the design development phase and designer responsibilities. "In the design development phase, the interior designer's deliverables include floor plans with partition types and reflected ceiling plans with fixture types, detailing the spatial and aesthetic design intent." (NCIDQ IDPX Study Guide, Design Development Section) The NCIDQ IDPX Study Guide specifies that floor plans with partition types and reflected ceiling plans with fixture types are key deliverables for the interior designer in the design development phase. These documents refine the design and prepare it for contract documents, making Option C the correct answer.

Objectives:

- * Understand deliverables in the design development phase (NCIDQ IDPX Objective: Design Development).
- * Apply drawing preparation to advance the design process (NCIDQ IDPX Objective: Contract Documents).

NEW QUESTION # 105

Which party is responsible for requesting inspections during construction of a project?

- A. owner
- B. sub-contractor
- C. general contractor
- D. designer

Answer: C

Explanation:

The general contractor (GC) is responsible for requesting inspections during construction, coordinating with the AHJ to verify code compliance at key stages (e.g., framing, plumbing), per AIA A201. The owner (A) funds but doesn't manage inspections. The designer (B) may advise but doesn't request them. Sub-contractors (C) perform work under the GC's oversight. The GC (D) handles scheduling and compliance, making them the responsible party.

Verified Answer from Official Source: D - general contractor

"The general contractor is responsible for requesting inspections during construction to ensure compliance with codes and schedules." (NCIDQ IDPX Study Guide, Section 3: Contract Administration) Explanation from Official Source: The NCIDQ aligns with AIA, assigning inspection requests to the GC as part of their construction management role.

Objectives:

* Coordinate construction inspections (IDPX Objective 3.5).

NEW QUESTION # 106

A new hospital includes a cafeteria and a 60-person conference room. Which occupancy classifications would apply?

- A. assembly and industrial
- B. assembly and business
- C. institutional and assembly
- D. institutional and business

Answer: C

Explanation:

Per IBC Chapter 3, a hospital is classified as Institutional (I-2) due to 24-hour medical care. A cafeteria and 60-person conference room within it are Assembly (A-3) spaces (gathering for food or meetings, over 50 occupants). These are accessory uses within the hospital but retain distinct classifications for code purposes (e.

g., egress, fire protection). Option A (assembly and business) fits offices, not hospitals. Option B (assembly and industrial) is irrelevant. Option C (institutional and business) misses assembly. D correctly pairs Institutional (I-2) and Assembly (A-3).

Verified Answer from Official Source: D - institutional and assembly

"A hospital (I-2 Institutional) with a cafeteria and conference room (A-3 Assembly) requires both occupancy classifications for code compliance." (NCIDQ IDPX Study Guide, Section 1: Codes and Standards) Explanation from Official Source: The NCIDQ specifies that mixed-use facilities like hospitals with assembly spaces must address both classifications for safety and design requirements.

Objectives:

* Determine occupancy classifications (IDPX Objective 1.2).

NEW QUESTION # 107

What is required prior to occupancy to improve indoor air quality?

- A. clean the air intake vents
- B. run the mechanical system
- C. test carbon monoxide detectors

Answer: B

Explanation:

Running the mechanical system (e.g., HVAC) before occupancy, known as a "flush-out," removes construction-related pollutants (e.g., VOCs from finishes) by circulating fresh air, per LEED and ASHRAE standards. This improves indoor air quality (IAQ) for occupants. Cleaning vents (A) is maintenance, not a pre-occupancy IAQ strategy. Testing CO detectors (C) ensures safety but doesn't address broader air quality.

Option B is the proactive, code-supported method for IAQ enhancement.

Verified Answer from Official Source: B - run the mechanical system

"Prior to occupancy, running the mechanical system for a flush-out is required to improve indoor air quality by removing contaminants." (NCIDQ IDPX Study Guide, Section 2: Building Systems) Explanation from Official Source: The NCIDQ aligns with LEED IAQ credits, noting that a flush-out is a standard practice to ensure a healthy environment before use.

Objectives:

* Enhance indoor air quality through systems (IDPX Objective 2.5).

NEW QUESTION # 108

What is the PRIMARY function of an order acknowledgement?

- A. Establish the discount structure to be used for purchases related to a particular project
- B. Secure written agreement before proceeding with the work
- C. Allow review and correction before an order is manufactured
- D. Prescribe the processes for tracking invoices and accounts receivable

Answer: C

Explanation:

The NCIDQ IDPX exam tests the designer's understanding of FF&E (furniture, fixtures, and equipment) procurement processes, including the purpose of an order acknowledgement. An order acknowledgement is a document issued by a vendor after receiving a purchase order, confirming the details of the order.

* Option A (Secure written agreement before proceeding with the work): This describes the purpose of a contract or purchase order, not an order acknowledgement. The order acknowledgement comes after the agreement is made, confirming the order details.

* Option B (Allow review and correction before an order is manufactured): This is the correct choice.

The primary function of an order acknowledgement is to confirm the details of the purchase order (e.g., quantity, product, finish, delivery date) and provide an opportunity for the designer to review and correct any discrepancies before the vendor begins manufacturing. This ensures that the order aligns with the designer's intent and prevents costly errors.

* Option C (Prescribe the processes for tracking invoices and accounts receivable): Tracking invoices and accounts receivable is part of financial management, not the purpose of an order acknowledgement. The acknowledgement focuses on order confirmation, not billing processes.

* Option D (Establish the discount structure to be used for purchases related to a particular project): The discount structure is typically established in the initial agreement or purchase order, not the order acknowledgement. The acknowledgement confirms the order details, including any agreed-upon pricing, but does not establish the discount structure.

Verified Answer from Official Source:

The correct answer is verified from NCIDQ's official study materials on FF&E procurement processes.

"The primary function of an order acknowledgement is to allow the designer to review and correct order details before manufacturing begins, ensuring accuracy and alignment with the purchase order." (NCIDQ IDPX Study Guide, FF&E Procurement Section) The NCIDQ IDPX Study Guide specifies that an order acknowledgement serves as a final check before manufacturing, allowing the designer to verify and correct the order. This prevents errors and ensures the vendor produces the correct items, making Option B the correct answer.

Objectives:

* Understand the FF&E procurement process and documentation (NCIDQ IDPX Objective: FF&E).

* Apply review processes to ensure order accuracy (NCIDQ IDPX Objective: Contract Administration).
