PMI Project Management Professional (2025 Version) Sample Questions (Q1937-Q1942):

NEW QUESTION # 1937

A project manager has been assigned to an education project with the objective of training a workforce in application development. One of the deliverables is to provide internships to the best students in the customer's active projects. However, the customer does not have enough projects in progress right now. The project manager decides to create several internal projects in order to ensure the internships. Which three actions should the project manager take to fulfill this scenario without adding costs for the customer? (Choose three)

- A. Create a work breakdown structure (WBS) of the new scope with the internal projects
- B. Influence the client to initiate a new project.
- C. Use the project's contingency budget
- D. Create a change request with the scope of the new internal projects.
- E. Manage the quality of the delivery

Answer: A,D,E

Explanation:

Creating internal projects to provide internships for the students is a change in the project scope that requires approval from the customer and other stakeholders. Therefore, the project manager should create a change request with the scope of the new internal projects and submit it to the Perform Integrated Change Control process¹. The change request should include the rationale, benefits, risks, and impacts of the proposed change on the project objectives, deliverables, schedule, cost, quality, and resources. The project manager should also update the project management plan and other relevant documents to reflect the change in scope. To plan and execute the new internal projects, the project manager should create a work breakdown structure (WBS) of the new scope with the internal projects². A WBS is a hierarchical decomposition of the project scope into manageable deliverables and work packages. A WBS helps the project manager to define, organize, and monitor the project work, as well as to allocate resources, assign responsibilities, and estimate costs and durations. The project manager should involve the project team and the interns in creating the WBS to ensure their buy-in and commitment.

To ensure that the internal projects meet the customer's expectations and the project's quality standards, the project manager should manage the quality of the delivery³. Quality management involves planning, implementing, and controlling quality activities to ensure that the project deliverables conform to the requirements and specifications. The project manager should use quality tools and techniques, such as quality checklists, audits, inspections, testing, and reviews, to measure and improve the quality of the internal projects. The project manager should also document and communicate the quality results and feedback to the project team, the interns, the customer, and other stakeholders.
