NEW QUESTION # 103

Therapeutic duplication would be a concern for a patient prescribed both atorvastatin and:

- A. Zocor.
- B. Cardizem.
- C. Lopressor.
- D. Norvasc.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Atorvastatin and Zocor (simvastatin) are both HMG-CoA reductase inhibitors (statins). Prescribing two drugs from the same class for the same indication represents therapeutic duplication, which increases risk of adverse effects (e.g., myopathy, rhabdomyolysis) without added benefit. In contrast, Cardizem (diltiazem) is a calcium channel blocker, Lopressor (metoprolol) a beta-blocker, and Norvasc (amlodipine) a dihydropyridine calcium channel blocker—these are not statins.

NEW QUESTION # 105

An enteral nutrition product may be used for:

- A. Intravenous administration
- B. Tube feedings
- C. Patients with non-functional gastrointestinal tracts
- D. Hyperalimentation

Answer: B

Explanation:

Enteral nutrition delivers nutrients via the gastrointestinal tract, commonly through tube feedings (e.g., nasogastric, gastrostomy, or jejunostomy tubes). Parenteral nutrition (often called hyperalimentation) is administered intravenously and is used when the GI tract is non-functional. Therefore, enteral products are not intended for IV administration and are not used when the GI tract cannot be used.
