A new CISO just started with a company and on the CISO's desk is the last complete Information Security Management audit report. The audit report is over two years old. After reading it, what should be the CISO's FIRST priority?

- A. Have internal audit conduct another audit to see what has changed.
- B. Contract with an external audit company to conduct an unbiased audit
- C. Meet with audit team to determine a timeline for corrections
- D. Review the recommendations and follow up to see if audit implemented the changes

Answer: D

Explanation:
Initial Assessment for a New CISO:
* Upon starting a new role, the CISO's first task is to understand the current security posture by evaluating existing reports, audits, and documentation.
* The two-year-old audit report provides a starting point to identify gaps and determine if previous recommendations were implemented.
Why Following Up on Audit Recommendations is the First Priority:
* Ensures critical findings from the previous audit have been addressed, which could mitigate potential risks.
* Provides insight into the organization's ability to act on audit findings and close gaps effectively.
* Highlights areas where improvements are still needed.
Why Other Options Are Incorrect:
* A. Conduct another internal audit: Premature; following up on the existing audit is more immediate and actionable.
* B. Contract with an external audit company: Adds cost and delays addressing known issues.

Characteristics
* Least Equipment Needed: Social engineering often requires no more than communication tools (e.g., phone, email) or physical presence.
* Highest Success Rate: Human error is a common vulnerability, making this approach highly effective, especially when attackers exploit psychological triggers like urgency, fear, or curiosity.
Comparison of Options
* A. War driving: Requires equipment for detecting wireless networks and relies on the presence of weak Wi-Fi configurations.
* B. Operating system attacks: Involves identifying and exploiting OS vulnerabilities, requiring technical expertise and tools.
* D. Shrink wrap attack: Exploits default or unpatched software installations, requiring more specific conditions than social engineering.
EC-Council References
* CISO Insights: Social engineering attacks like phishing, pretexting, and baiting are consistently highlighted as major threats in EC-Council's curriculum.
* Incident Reports: Case studies in EC-Council's guidance show social engineering's prevalence and effectiveness across various sectors.
