NEW QUESTION # 173

PTT has a number of subsidiary companies around the world, including FTT based in Europe and CTT based in Indonesia CTT purchases all of us raw materials from FTT CTT processes these materials and the resulting products are exported to several different countries CTT pays FTT in the Indonesian currency.

Indonesia's inflation is higher than that of FTT's home country
Which of the following statements are correct?
Select ALL that apply

- A. FTT could investigate whether it could import anything from Indonesia in order to create a natural hedge.
- B. FTT could ask for all payments to K to be made in its home currency, which would reduce exposure to currency risk
- C. CTT will be exposed to translation risk because FTT will almost certainly have to reflect the changing prices in its selling price and it will be difficult for CTT to make a profit
- D. FTT will be exposed to transaction risk. The Indonesian currency that it receives is likely to decline over time because of anticipated inflation
- E. FTT will be exposed to transaction risks as the Indonesian currency will appreciate over time because of the expected inflation rates

Answer: A,B,D

Explanation:

Indonesia has higher inflation, so its currency is expected to depreciate, not appreciate.

A: Wrong - says appreciate.

B: Correct - FTT receives a currency likely to fall in value, so it has transaction risk.

C: Correct - invoicing in FTT's home currency shifts/reduces its own currency risk.

D: Incorrect - that's more about business/operational risk, not translation risk.

E: Correct - if FTT also pays out Indonesian currency (e.g. imports from Indonesia), receipts and payments can naturally hedge each other.
