NEW QUESTION # 48

A fire extinguisher in the data centre is found which is classed as ABC.

Is this suitable?

- A. Depends on the brand
- B. Only for fires not related to electrical power
- C. Yes
- D. No

Answer: D

Explanation:

A fire extinguisher in the data centre that is classed as ABC is not suitable, because it contains dry chemical powder that can damage the ICT equipment and the data. ABC fire extinguishers are designed to fight Class A, B, and C fires, which are fueled by combustible materials, flammable liquids or gases, and electrical equipment, respectively. However, the dry chemical powder can leave a corrosive residue on the ICT equipment, which can cause short circuits, data loss, or malfunction. Moreover, the dry chemical powder can be difficult to clean, especially from the small spaces and crevices of the ICT equipment. Therefore, ABC fire extinguishers are not recommended for data centres, and should be replaced with more suitable fire extinguishers, such as clean agent fire extinguishers, which use gas or liquid that does not leave any residue or harm the ICT equipment.

NEW QUESTION # 49

What is the main difference between an Environmental Monitoring System (EMS) and a Building Management System (BMS)?

- A. An EMS provides local alarms. A BMS provides both local and remote alarms.
- B. A BMS is only able to monitor dry contacts (on/off). An EMS can also monitor analog values.
- C. A BMS only operates as a stand-alone system. An EMS can be configured as a redundant system.
- D. An EMS monitors only. A BMS monitors and controls.

Answer: D

Explanation:

The main difference between an Environmental Monitoring System (EMS) and a Building Management System (BMS) is that an EMS monitors only, while a BMS monitors and controls. An EMS is a system that collects and records data from various sensors and devices that measure environmental parameters, such as temperature, humidity, air quality, power, and water. An EMS provides alerts and reports based on the data, but it does not control or adjust the environmental conditions. A BMS is a system that integrates and manages various building systems, such as HVAC, lighting, security, fire, and access. A BMS not only monitors the data from these systems, but also controls and optimizes them to achieve the desired performance and efficiency. A BMS can also communicate with an EMS to receive data and provide feedback.
