- E. Hardware Asset Management (HAM) and Software Asset Management (SAM)

Answer: A

Explanation:

A blind audit is a type of inventory audit that does not provide any information about the expected assets in a location. The auditor scans all the assets in the location and compares them with the records in ServiceNow1.

To perform a blind audit, you need the Hardware Asset Management (HAM) application, which enables you to manage the lifecycle of your hardware assets, and the ServiceNow Agent mobile app, which allows you to scan asset tags and barcodes using your mobile device12.

The ServiceNow My Assets mobile app is used to view and request assets from the enterprise asset catalog, not to perform audits3.

The Software Asset Management (SAM) application is used to optimize software licenses and compliance, not to perform audits4.

The ITSM Asset Management application is used to track the financial, contractual, and inventory details of hardware and devices, not to perform audits. Reference:

Once a catalog item has been requested, the mechanism that determines the approvals and tasks that are triggered in the application is the flow<sup>12</sup>.

A flow is a graphical representation of a business process that consists of one or more actions, such as approvals, tasks, notifications, scripts, etc., that are executed based on certain conditions and triggers<sup>12</sup>.

A flow can be associated with a catalog item to define the fulfillment process for that item, such as who needs to approve it, what tasks need to be performed, and what notifications need to be sent<sup>12</sup>.

A flow can be created and managed using the Flow Designer, a low-code development tool that allows users to design and test flows without writing any code<sup>12</sup>.

A flow can be activated or deactivated, versioned, and published to make it available for use<sup>12</sup>.
