NEW QUESTION # 822

A technician just finished assembling a new PC for a client. Upon POST, the device presents an unspecified beep code and turns off automatically after five seconds. The technician double-checks the bill of materials for the new build and confirms all items have been installed. Which of the following should the technician do NEXT?

- A. Ensure thermal paste is being used on the CPU.
- B. Check to make sure that any video cards have auxiliary power cabling connected.
- C. Verify the header panel connector is properly connected.
- D. Spot-check that the I/O shield for the motherboard is properly installed.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The technician should verify the header panel connector is properly connected. A beep code is a diagnostic tool used by motherboards to indicate issues with hardware components. This beep code may be indicating an issue with the connection between the motherboard and the case's header panel connector. This connector is responsible for providing power to the system and any connected peripherals. Therefore, the technician should verify the connection is secure and properly connected before attempting any other troubleshooting steps.

NEW QUESTION # 823

After a new network printer is installed and added to the print server, users are unable to install the printer. However, the technician is able to install the printer when logged in to a user's computer as an administrator. Which of the following is the best option to allow all users to print to the new printer?

- A. Map the users to a print share for driver installation.
- B. Install all applicable print drivers on the print server.
- C. Remotely log in to all users' computers and install the printer.
- D. Give all users temporary administrator rights to install the new printer.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The best option to allow all users to print to the new network printer is to install all applicable print drivers on the print server. This way, the print server can automatically provide the correct driver to the client computers when they connect to the printer. This option also reduces the administrative overhead and security risks of the other options, which involve either granting users more privileges, mapping them to a shared folder, or remotely accessing their computers.

NEW QUESTION # 824

An administrator notices that on an intermittent basis the virtual machines are running slowly. The virtual machines are correctly sized, and the hardware has enough free resources to cope with demand Which of the following is most likely the cause?

- A. The physical servers are not able to draw enough power
- B. The physical servers are throttling due to overheating
- C. The physical servers are contending for resources
- D. The physical servers do not have enough network bandwidth.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

The physical servers are throttling due to overheating. This means that the servers are reducing their performance to prevent damage from excessive heat. This can cause the virtual machines to run slowly, as they depend on the physical servers' resources. To avoid this, the servers need adequate cooling and ventilation, as well as monitoring of their temperature and fan speed. According to the CompTIA Core1 objectives, one of the environmental factors that can affect system performance is overheating. A research paper on thermal management of servers also states that overheating can lead to performance degradation, reliability issues, and energy inefficiency.
