NEW QUESTION # 58

Which of the following statements are true about VXLAN concepts?

- A. In a VXLAN packet, the source IP address is the local node 's VTEP IP address, and the destination IP address is the remote node 's VTEP IP address. This pair of VTEP IP addresses corresponds to a VXLAN tunnel.
- B. A VirtualIF interface is a Layer 3 logical interface created for a BD.
- C. A virtual access point (VAP) is a VXLAN service access point. Currently, CE switches support only VAPs that are VLANs.
- D. On a VXLAN network, VNIs can be mapped to BDs in 1:1 mode, and a BD can function as a VXLAN network entity to forward VXLAN data packets.

Answer: A,B,C,D

Explanation:

In Huawei VXLAN architecture, all listed statements accurately reflect core design concepts used in CloudFabric deployments.

A is correct: a Virtual Interface (VBDIF/VirtualIF) is a Layer 3 interface associated with a Bridge Domain (BD) , enabling inter-subnet routing (distributed gateway function).

B is correct: Huawei VXLAN commonly uses a 1:1 mapping between VNI and BD , where the BD acts as the Layer 2 forwarding domain. This mapping ensures clear separation of tenant networks and simplifies forwarding logic.

C is correct: VXLAN encapsulation uses VTEP (VXLAN Tunnel Endpoint) IP addresses . The source IP is the local VTEP, and the destination IP is the remote VTEP. Together, they logically represent the VXLAN tunnel used for transporting overlay traffic across the IP underlay.

D is also correct: a VAP (Virtual Access Point) represents the service access interface. On Huawei CE switches, VAPs are typically implemented using VLAN-based access , meaning VLANs act as the entry point for VXLAN services.

These concepts are fundamental in Huawei EVPN-VXLAN fabrics, enabling scalable, multi-tenant, and automated data center networking.
