NEW QUESTION # 167

Your customer's 802.11n laptops are not able to see the SSID in the 5 GHz band in the conference room. When doing a walkthrough using one of these laptops, you confirm that it is unable to see the SSID in the 5 GHz band in the conference room. When using your own 802.11ac laptop, you're able to see the SSID. What is the most likely cause of this problem?

- A. The customer laptop does not support Transmit Beamforming
- B. The AP is configured to use channel 36
- C. Their laptops are SISO clients
- D. The AP is on channel 144

Answer: D

Explanation:

In the 5 GHz band, certain channels like 144 are not universally supported across all devices, especially older 802.11n clients. If the AP is operating on channel 144, and the client's regulatory domain or hardware does not support this channel, the SSID will not be visible to the client.

The CWDP-305 Official Study and Reference Guide notes:

"Client devices may not support all channels in the 5 GHz band, depending on their regulatory domain and hardware capabilities. Channel 144, for example, is not supported by all 802.11n clients." NEW QUESTION # 168

What might limit the ability to locate 802.11 clients using a WLAN infrastructure without an 802.11 tag? (Choose all that apply.)

- A. When its radio is disabled
- B. RF channel selection

- C. Lack of 802.11k support
- D. When it is off

Answer: A,D

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation:

Locating 802.11 clients without dedicated tags relies on the clients actively transmitting signals. If a client's radio is disabled or the device is powered off, it will not emit any signals, making it impossible for the WLAN infrastructure to detect or locate it. While 802.11k support and RF channel selection can affect the accuracy and efficiency of location tracking, they do not prevent the basic ability to detect a client that is actively transmitting.
