Answer: C,D

NEW QUESTION # 101
A template for requirements that provides fields to be filled in is called:

- A. Document template
- B. All the other options are wrong.
- C. Form template
- D. Phrase template

Answer: C

Explanation:
Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation From Exact Extract:
CPRE distinguishes three template types. Phrase templates define a sentence pattern for individual requirements (e.g., condition-subject-action-object). Document templates give the overall structure of a document (sections, headings, mandatory content). Form templates present a form with labeled fields-such as ID, description, rationale, priority, source-to be completed for each requirement. The question explicitly describes a template with fields to fill in, which corresponds to a form template. Therefore option B is correct.

NEW QUESTION # 102
