NEW QUESTION # 23
A company will be expanding their existing VCF environment for a new application. The existing VCF environment currently has a management domain and two separate VI workload domains with different hardware profiles. The new application has the following requirements:
* The application will use significantly more memory than current workloads today.
* The application will have a limited number of licenses to run on hosts.
* Additional VCF and hardware costs have been approved for the application.
* The application will contain confidential customer information that requires isolation from other workloads.
What design recommendation should the administrator document?

- A. Enough identical hardware for the management domain should be ordered to accommodate the new application requirements and a new workload domain should be designed for the application.
- B. Deploy a new consolidated VCF instance and deploy the new application into it.
- C. A new Workload domain with hardware supporting the memory requirements of the new application should be implemented.

- D. Purchase enough matching hardware to accommodate the new application's memory requirements and expand an existing cluster to accommodate the new application. Use host affinity rules to manage the new licensing.
