Which protocol divides the information into packets, sequentially numbers each packet, and inserts some error control information?

- A. File Transfer protocol
- B. None of the above
- C. Information Control protocol
- D. Transmission Control protocol

Answer: D

Explanation:

The Transmission Control Protocol (TCP) works with IP as part of the TCP/IP suite. It divides data into packets, numbers them sequentially, and adds error detection and correction codes. This ensures that data is transmitted reliably, in order, and without loss or corruption.

File Transfer Protocol (B) uses TCP but does not handle packet creation itself.

Information Control Protocol (C) is not a recognized protocol.

"None of the above" (D) is incorrect because TCP is the correct answer.
