NEW QUESTION # 70

Why should project closeout meetings be held?

- A. To commission the project for occupancy
- B. To resolve subcontractor disputes
- C. To set substantial completion
- D. To review handover procedures and activities

Answer: D

Explanation:

In CSI's description of the project life cycle and construction phase services, project closeout is treated as a structured, coordinated process involving the owner, A/E, and contractor. A closeout meeting (or series of meetings) is recommended to:

* Review all required closeout procedures such as punch list completion, testing, training, record documents, warranties, and final cleaning.

* Clarify responsibilities and timelines for each party in achieving substantial and final completion.

* Coordinate handover activities, including delivery of O&M manuals, as-built/record documents, warranties, spare parts, keys, and access codes.

* Confirm the sequence for inspections, certifications, and the process toward final payment and release.

Thus the primary purpose of a closeout meeting is to review and coordinate handover procedures and activities, making D the correct answer.

Why the other choices do not match CSI's intent for closeout meetings:

* A. To set substantial completion Substantial completion is established by contract definition and certification, usually when the work is sufficiently complete for the owner's beneficial use and occupancy. The closeout meeting may discuss the path to substantial completion, but it does not exist just to "set" that date.

* B. To resolve subcontractor disputes Disputes may be addressed through separate claim and dispute resolution procedures outlined in the Conditions of the Contract. While closeout meetings might note open issues, their primary purpose is coordination of closeout and handover, not serving as a dispute- resolution forum.

* C. To commission the project for occupancy Commissioning is a structured process of testing and verifying systems performance, typically running in parallel with late construction and early operation. The closeout meeting coordinates requirements (e.g., commissioning reports) but commissioning itself is carried out through separate technical procedures and field activities, not simply by holding a meeting.

Key CSI-aligned references (no URLs):

* CSI Project Delivery Practice Guide - chapters on Construction Phase and Project Closeout.

* CSI CDT Body of Knowledge - content on construction phase services, closeout procedures, and documentation.

* Standard A/E service descriptions aligned with CSI concepts for project closeout and handover.
