Drag and Drop Question

An energy sustainability company uses Dynamics 365 Supply Chain Management.

The company sells raw materials to contractors working on a pipeline project by using special pricing. The company plans to sell raw materials to non-pipeline contractors; however, those sales will not be eligible for the special pricing, any discounts, or price breaks. The non-pipeline contractor pricing may change over time. The price history must be retained.

Answer:

Explanation:

Explanation:

Box 1: price group, affiliations

Price groups are at the heart of price and discount management in Commerce. Price groups are used to assign prices and discounts to Commerce entities (that is, channels, catalogs, affiliations, and loyalty programs). Because price groups are used for all pricing and discounts, it's very important that you plan how you will use them before you start.

If you want to apply customer-specific prices, we recommend that you not set price groups directly on the customer. Instead, you should use affiliations.

Box 2: trade agreement, customer

Trade agreements are fixed price or discount agreements that are set up for one or more customers or vendors for the sale or purchase of single or multiple products.

Trade agreements can apply to the following:

- A specific customer, a vendor, or a product
- Groups of customers, vendors, or items
- All customers, all vendors, or all items
