NEW QUESTION # 231

In which situation would an edge computing solution be used?

- A. where fast memory is needed
- B. where high CPU throughput is needed
- C. where low latency is needed
- D. where high disk space is needed

Answer: C

Explanation:

Edge computing solutions are utilized where low latency is needed. Edge computing involves processing data closer to where it is generated (at the edge of the network), which reduces the latency compared to sending data to a centralized data center for processing.

* Low Latency Needs: Edge computing is designed to provide real-time data processing and decision-making by reducing the distance data has to travel. This is crucial for applications requiring immediate data processing, such as IoT devices, autonomous vehicles, and real-time analytics.
