Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 112

Cloud Kicks received a new requirement to calculate summaries from child objects of a standard object. The team would prefer to solve this declaratively.

What are two considerations an app builder should evaluate?

Choose 2 answers

- A. An app builder is unable to change a look up to a master-detail relationship.
- B. An object can have up to two master-detail relationships.
- C. A value is required in all records of the lookup field prior to converting to a master-detail relationship.
- D. A trigger on save or update can kick off calculations.

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

When Cloud Kicks needs to calculate summaries from child objects of a standard object declaratively, a few key considerations about master-detail relationships come into play. Master-detail relationships are critical in Salesforce when working with roll-up summary fields, which allow you to calculate values from child records.

* Option B: An object can have up to two master-detail relationships.

* Salesforce allows an object to have two master-detail relationships. This is important because if you want to aggregate child record data using roll-up summary fields, you need to have a master- detail relationship in place. Each master-detail relationship links a child object to a parent, and you can create roll-up summary fields on the parent object to summarize the child record data.
