AACN CCRN (Adult) - Direct Care Eligibility Pathway Sample Questions (Q961-Q966):

NEW QUESTION # 961

Which of the following is NOT a risk factor for the development of a Large Bowel Obstruction (LBO)?

- A. Crohn's disease
- B. Ischemia
- C. Diverticulitis
- D. Colorectal cancer

Answer: A

Explanation:

Crohn's disease is a risk factor for Small Bowel Obstruction (SBO).

Colorectal cancer is the most common cause of a Large Bowel Obstruction (LBO) in the United States.

The most common site of obstruction is the descending colon and rectosigmoid. Other causes include inflammation (diverticulitis or inflammatory bowel disease), ischemia, intussusception, anastomotic stricture, hernias, abscess, or tumors.

NEW QUESTION # 962

The critical care is helping to induce a barbiturate coma in patient who has elevated Intracranial Pressure (ICP). Which of the following is LEAST LIKELY to be caused by a barbiturate coma?

- A. Myocardial depression
- B. Ileus
- C. Hypertension
- D. Impaired thermoregulation

Answer: C

Explanation:

A barbiturate coma may be used as a third line therapy to manage elevated ICP, but the patient will need to be carefully monitored for potential complications. These complications may include hypotension (not hypertension), impaired thermoregulation, ileus, and myocardial depression.

NEW QUESTION # 963

A patient with meningitis has a purple blotchy rash. Which type of meningitis is this MOST LIKELY to be?

- A. Viral
- B. Parasitic
- C. Fungal
- D. Bacterial

Answer: D

Explanation:

Meningitis that causes a petechial rash that progresses to pupal blotches is meningococcal meningitis, caused by Neisseria meningitidis, a bacteria. Meningococcal meningitis is one of the most serious types of meningitis and requires immediate treatment.

NEW QUESTION # 964

Analyze and interpret the following ABG results:

* pH: 7.30

* PaCO₂: 68 mmHg

* HCO₃: 28 mEq/L

- A. Partially compensated respiratory acidosis
- B. Acute (uncompensated) respiratory acidosis
- C. Acute (uncompensated) metabolic alkalosis
- D. Partially compensated metabolic acidosis

Answer: A

Explanation:

Normal pH ranges from 7.35-7.45. Since this patient's pH is below 7.45, the patient is experiencing acidosis. Normal CO₂ (carbon dioxide) levels range from 35-45 mmHg, and normal HCO₃ (bicarbonate) levels range from 22-26 mEq/L. CO₂ is the respiratory component and HCO₃ is the metabolic component. The component that matches the pH is the system controlling the ABG (Arterial Blood Gases).

In this scenario, the pH and CO₂ levels are both acidotic, so the primary mechanism is a respiratory acidosis. Partial compensation is occurring because the CO₂ and HCO₃ are rising together, but the pH remains abnormal; the metabolic alkalosis is compensation for the CO₂, but the pH is still not within normal limits, so it is only partially effective.

NEW QUESTION # 965

A patient with receptive aphasia from a stroke is to be enrolled in a clinical trial. How should the critical care nurse proceed to ensure that informed consent is ethically obtained?

- A. Presume the patient comprehends the information provided and have the patient sign the consent
- B. Limit the patient's involvement in the consent process due to their inhibited decision-making capacity
- C. Obtain a copy of the consent form to place in the patient's chart
- D. Involve the patient's surrogate decision-maker in the consent process

Answer: D

Explanation:

The functional standard of determining decision-making capacity focuses on the patient's abilities, rather than on the condition of the patient or the projected outcome of the decision. The patient must be able to comprehend, to communicate, and to form and express a preference.

When the patient lacks these three essential elements to make an informed decision, the healthcare team must rely on other sources for direction, and to ensure the patient's choices can be understood.

Advance directives and surrogate decision-makers are ways to ensure consent is obtained ethically in these cases.
