NEW QUESTION # 173

An administrator has received multiple tickets from users experiencing log-on and log-off slowness while using VDI non-persistent desktops, other users in same VDI farm using persistent desktops are not experiencing the same issue. Currently, the administrator is leveraging an ESXi-based Nutanix all-flash cluster environment with a VMware Horizon Infrastructure. What is causing the slowness for the non-persistent users?

- A. Network slowness due to high latency
- B. user accounts configured with Roaming Profiles
- C. Desktops don't have enough hardware resources.
- D. Nutanix AOS software running older versions.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Roaming profiles are a way to deliver user settings across physical and virtual desktops. However, they can also cause issues such as profile unload failures² and slow log-on and log-off times¹.

- A. When Prism Central resides in NC2 Cloud on Azure
- B. When Prism Central resides on prem
- C. When Prism Central resides in Xi Cloud
- D. When Prism Central resides in NC2 Cloud on AWS

Answer: C

Explanation:

AHV Xi PC plug-in is used for when Prism Central resides in Xi Cloud. Prism Central is a management plane that provides centralized control and visibility across multiple Nutanix clusters and clouds. Xi Cloud is a hybrid cloud platform that enables customers to run their applications and workloads on Nutanix infrastructure in public cloud environments such as AWS and Azure². NEW QUESTION # 175

How should an administrator protect Writable AppVolumes during a disaster in a Nutanix environment?

- A. Create a protection domain and add the AppVolumes VM entities to it. Set up a schedule to replicate the VMS every 60 minutes.
- B. Enable HA reservations on the cluster to ensure there is capacity in case of failure.
- C. Create a storage container in both the primary and DR data centers for the Writable AppVolumes. Set up asynchronous DR between the two sites.
- D. Disable HA reservations to ensure that VMS are powered on using best effort during a disaster,

Answer: C

Explanation:

Writable AppVolumes are a feature of VMware App Volumes that provides users with a dedicated virtual disk for storing user profile data and user-installed applications¹. Writable AppVolumes are stored as VMDK files on a datastore².

To protect Writable AppVolumes during a disaster in a Nutanix environment, one possible solution is to use asynchronous DR between two sites. Asynchronous DR allows you to replicate VMs and their associated data from one site to another at regular intervals using protection domains and remote sites³.

NEW QUESTION # 176

There are 50 people in a legal department who are scheduled to have their laptops replaced with virtual desktops. Their application suite consists of Microsoft Office 365, Photoshop, and an Ip-based application internally developed by the company.

Which option minimizes management overhead of the gold image, while providing the users with access to their application suite?

- A. Non-persistent MCS delivered virtual machines virtualizing the application suite
- B. Remote Desktop Services virtualizing the application suite
- C. Persistent virtual machines with the application suite built into the gold image
- D. Citrix Virtual Apps virtual hosted desktop with the application suite built into the gold image

Answer: A

Explanation:

ersistent virtual machines are those that retain all the user's personal settings, files, and customizations after each session¹. Non-persistent virtual machines are those that reset to a predefined state after each session and do not save any user data². MCS (Machine Creation Services) is a Citrix feature that allows administrators to create and manage multiple virtual machines from a single master image³. Remote Desktop Services (RDS) is a Microsoft feature that allows users to access applications or desktops hosted on a remote server⁴. Citrix Virtual Apps is a Citrix feature that allows users to access applications hosted on a remote server or cloud⁵

NEW QUESTION # 177

An administrator would like to provide seamless access to FSLogix user profiles hosted on Nutanix Files in a secondary data center for DR purposes, and has configured VDI Sync to replicate the data. No other changes have been made. After analyzing the environment, the administrator notices much higher than expected CPU and RAM utilization on both the source and target AHV Clusters, and wants to reduce overall resource usage.

What is the least disruptive method to accomplish this goal?

- A. Increase resources on CVMs.
- B. Allow one-way synchronization only.
- C. Increase resources on FSVMs.
- D. Reduce synchronization intervals.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Nutanix Files VDI Sync is a feature originally designed for active-active use cases where users might access data from either site, requiring bidirectional metadata scanning and locking. This process is resource-intensive.

For a Disaster Recovery (DR) purpose where the secondary site is passive (users only access it if the primary fails), full active-active bidirectional synchronization is unnecessary and wasteful. To reduce the high CPU and RAM utilization caused by the constant metadata comparison between sites, the administrator should configure one-way synchronization (or leverage standard Async DR protection). This ensures data replicates to the DR site without the overhead of checking the DR site for changes to replicate back to the source.
