NEW QUESTION # 199
During lunch time in the break room of a company, Wi-Fi connectivity on the 2.4 GHz band is intermittent. Every other time of the day, it works fine.

What's the likely cause of this issue?

- A. Toasters and ovens are heating up the air, raising the noise floor with the Wi-Fi on the 2.4 Ghz band
- B. Employees are using their cell data instead of using the Wi-Fi
- C. Microwaves in the cafeteria are interfering with the Wi-Fi on the 2.4 GHz band
- D. The AP in the cafeteria keeps rebooting due to lack of PoE budget on the switch

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 200

When viewing channel utilization information from a protocol analyzer, if high channel utilization is occurring, what should you ensure does not exist?
Response:

- A. High frames per second
- B. An RF signal generator causing an RF DoS
- C. High levels of workload
- D. A high percentage of low PHY rates

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 201

When creating a long-distance bridge link, it is important to know the channels in use by other networks on both ends of the link and within a reasonable range. It is not as important to know the channels in use in the middle area of the link. Why is this the case?

- A. Interference happens at the receiver
- B. Interference happens at the transmitter
- C. Your RF LoS will always be far above any interference in the middle because the signal travels up and then back down to the remote 802.11 receiver
- D. The signals in the middle of the link will increase the amplitude of your signal as it passes through them

Answer: A

Explanation:
Interference primarily affects the receiver's ability to demodulate signals. In a point-to-point link, RF interference occurring at the middle of the link has little to no impact unless it reaches either endpoint.
Therefore, the focus must be on minimizing interference at the receivers.
From CWDP-305:
"Interference at the receiver is the key concern in bridge links. The energy must be received cleanly to enable demodulation, so interference near the receiving AP is more critical than in the link's midspan."
