Which of the following is the GREATEST inherent risk when performing a disaster recovery plan (DRP) test?

- A. Lack of communication to affected users
- B. Poor documentation of results and lessons learned
- C. Lack of coordination among departments
- D. Disruption to the production environment

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

A disaster recovery plan (DRP) test is a simulation of a disaster scenario to evaluate the effectiveness and readiness of the DRP. The greatest inherent risk when performing a DRP test is the disruption to the production environment, which could cause operational issues, data loss, or system damage. Therefore, it is essential to plan and execute the DRP test carefully, with proper backup, isolation, and rollback procedures.

Poor documentation, lack of communication, and lack of coordination are also potential risks, but they are not as severe as disrupting the production environment. References = CISM Review Manual 15th Edition, page

253; CISM Review Questions, Answers & Explanations Database - 12 Month Subscription, QID 224.

The greatest inherent risk when performing a disaster recovery plan (DRP) test is disruption to the production environment. A DRP test involves simulating a disaster scenario to ensure that the organization's plans are effective and that it is able to recover from an incident. However, this involves running tests on the production environment, which has the potential to disrupt the normal operations of the organization. This inherent risk can be mitigated by running tests on a non-production environment or by running tests at times when disruption will be minimized.

NEW QUESTION # 383

An incident management team is alerted to a suspected security event. Before classifying the suspected event as a security incident, it is MOST important for the security manager to:

- A. follow the incident response plan
- B. conduct an incident forensic analysis.
- C. notify the business process owner.
- D. follow the business continuity plan (BCP).

Answer: A

Explanation:

Before classifying the suspected event as a security incident, it is most important for the security manager to follow the incident response plan, which is a predefined set of procedures and guidelines that outline the roles, responsibilities, and actions of the incident management team and the organization in the event of a security event or incident. Following the incident response plan can help to ensure a consistent, coordinated, and effective response to the suspected event, as well as to minimize the impact and damage to the business processes, functions, and assets. Following the incident response plan can also help to determine the nature, scope, and severity of the suspected event, and to decide whether it meets the criteria and threshold for being classified as a security incident that requires further escalation, investigation, and resolution. Following the incident response plan can also help to document and report the incident details, activities, and outcomes, and to provide feedback and recommendations for improvement and optimization of the incident response process and plan.

Conducting an incident forensic analysis, notifying the business process owner, and following the business continuity plan (BCP) are all important steps in the incident response process, but they are not the most important ones before classifying the suspected event as a security incident. Conducting an incident forensic analysis is a technical and detailed process that involves collecting, preserving, analyzing, and presenting evidence related to the incident, and it is usually performed after the incident has been classified, contained, and eradicated. Notifying the business process owner is a communication and notification process that involves informing the relevant stakeholders of the incident status, impact, and actions, and it is usually performed after the incident has been classified and assessed. Following the business continuity plan (BCP) is a recovery and restoration process that involves resuming and restoring the normal business operations and functions after the incident has been resolved and lessons learned have been identified and implemented. NEW QUESTION # 385

What is the BEST defense against a Structured Query Language (SQL) injection attack?

- A. Strict controls on input fields
- B. Regularly updated signature files
- C. An intrusion detection system
- D. A properly configured firewall

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

Structured Query Language (SQL) injection involves the typing of programming command statements within a data entry field on a web page, usually with the intent of fooling the application into thinking that a valid password has been entered in the password entry field. The best defense against such an attack is to have strict edits on what can be typed into a data input field so that programming commands will be rejected. Code reviews should also be conducted to ensure that such edits are in place and that there are no inherent weaknesses in the way the code is written; software is available to test for such weaknesses.

All other choices would fail to prevent such an attack.
