Lpi LPIC-1 Exam 101, Part 1 of 2, version 5.0 Sample Questions (Q277-Q282):

NEW QUESTION # 277

What is the output of the following command?
echo "Hello World" | tr -d aeiou

- A. eoo Hll Wrld
- B. Hll Wrld
- C. eoo
- D. Hello World

Answer: B

Explanation:

The tr command is used to translate or delete characters from a given input. The -d option specifies that the characters in the second argument should be deleted from the input. In this case, the second argument is aeiou, which are the vowels in the English alphabet. Therefore, the tr command will delete any vowel from the input, which is Hello World. The output will be the input without any vowels, which is Hll Wrld.

NEW QUESTION # 279

What is the process ID number of the init process on a SysV init based system?

- A. It is set to the current run level.
- B. 0
- C. 1
- D. It is different with each reboot.
- E. 2

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

The process ID number of the init process on a SysV init based system is 1. The init process is the first process that runs on the system, and it is responsible for initializing the user-space environment and spawning all other processes. The init process is always the first process that runs on the system, and it has the process ID (PID) of 1. The PID is a unique identifier for each process on the system, and it is assigned by the kernel.

The PID of the init process is always 1, regardless of the reboot or the run level. You can verify the PID of the init process by using the ps command, which shows information about the processes on the system. For example, to show the PID, the user, the command, and the arguments of the init process, use the following command:

ps -p 1 -o pid,user,cmd
```

The output of the command will show something like:

```
PID USER CMD 1 root /sbin/init
```

This shows that the init process has the PID of 1, the user of root, and the command of /sbin/init.
