NEW QUESTION # 274

(Which of the following statements about the fabric global resource pool is false?)

- A. A bridge domain is a Layer 2 broadcast domain used to forward data packets on a VXLAN.
- B. Configure a service VLAN pool when you need to configure external gateway interconnection VLANs, network service resource interconnection VLANs, management VLANs for policy association, and VN access VLANs.
- C. A VXLAN network identifier identifies a VXLAN.
- D. VLANs for connecting to external networks, VLANs for connecting to network service resources, and VLANs for connecting underlay devices are allocated from the VLAN resource pool.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed 200 to 250 words of Explanation From HCIP Datacom Campus Network documents knowledge without any URL or Links:

In a CloudCampus VXLAN fabric, the global resource pool centrally manages identifiers such as VLANs, VNIs, and bridge domains to ensure consistent allocation across the fabric.

Statement A is correct because a bridge domain (BD) is the VXLAN equivalent of a VLAN and represents a Layer 2 broadcast domain used for packet forwarding within a VXLAN network.

Statement C is also correct. A VXLAN Network Identifier (VNI) uniquely identifies a VXLAN segment and is a core VXLAN forwarding identifier.

Statement D is correct because the service VLAN pool is used to allocate VLANs for multiple purposes, including external gateway interconnections, network service resource interconnections, policy association management, and VN access VLANs.

Statement B is false. VLANs used for underlay device interconnections are not allocated from the VLAN resource pool managed by the VXLAN fabric. Underlay VLANs belong to the traditional IP underlay network and are typically planned and configured independently. The VLAN resource pool is intended for overlay-related services and fabric-managed VLAN usage only.

Therefore, the incorrect statement is B.
