NEW QUESTION # 81

- A. controller hardware issues
- B. controller version issues
- C. controller configuration issues

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 82

You have set up a new 2-node switchless cluster and want to verify that the failover is configured correctly.
In this scenario, which two commands accomplish this task? (Choose two.)

- A. storage failover show-takeover
- B. cluster ring show
- C. cluster ha show
- D. storage failover show

Answer: C,D

Explanation:

To verify failover in a two-node ONTAP configuration, you must confirm both cluster-level HA state (for two-node clusters) and storage failover state (takeover/giveback readiness) for the HA pair.

The command `cluster ha show` is used to verify the cluster HA status, which is especially relevant in two-node clusters where cluster HA can affect whether services remain available when one node is halted/rebooted.

ONTAP documentation notes behaviors specific to two-node clusters and cluster HA, including the importance of proper HA configuration to avoid both nodes stopping data service under certain halt/reboot conditions.

The command `storage failover show` is the primary command to verify HA pair readiness, showing takeover/giveback capability, partner connectivity, and status indicators needed to confirm that storage failover is configured correctly.

Option C (`cluster ring show`) is a cluster database/ring status diagnostic command; while it can be useful in troubleshooting quorum or RDB-related issues, it is not the standard command pair for verifying HA failover configuration correctness after installation.

Option D (`storage failover show-takeover`) is not the common baseline verification command cited for confirming general failover configuration; it is more takeover-output oriented rather than providing the full readiness overview that `storage failover show` provides.

Therefore, the two commands that accomplish correct failover verification in this scenario are A. `cluster ha show` and B. `storage failover show`.

NEW QUESTION # 83

You attempt to create a data volume on `aggr0` and receive a warning about severe performance or stability problems.
What is the reason for this warning?

- A. The performance load generated by `vol0` cannot be shared.
- B. The performance load of a data volume should not share `aggr0` with `vol0`.
- C. Controller failover and storage failover must occur in parallel.
- D. Controller failover and storage failover must occur at different times.

Answer: B

Explanation:

The root aggregate hosts system volumes such as `vol0`. Adding data volumes can negatively impact system operations, causing performance and stability issues.
