NEW QUESTION # 354

A project team is defining operational training, discussing a go-live date, and describing the operational handoff. Which of the following best describes what the team is developing?

- A. A handover to operations
- B. The project closeout report
- C. A transition plan
- D. Phase-gate review documentation

It typically includes details such as operational training, go-live date, support arrangements, roles and responsibilities, and acceptance criteria. A transition plan is different from a project closeout report, which summarizes the project performance, lessons learned, and final status. A handover to operations is a process of transferring the project deliverables to the operations team, but it is not a document. A phase-gate review documentation is a set of documents that are used to evaluate the project progress and readiness to move to the next phase, but it is not related to the operational handoff. A rollback plan can help to minimize the impact and risk of the change and ensure business continuity and stability.

NEW QUESTION # 356

- A. Prepare a new purchase order.
- B. Select a new vendor.
- C. Create a risk register.
- D. Make an impact assessment.

Answer: D

Explanation:

The project manager should make an impact assessment after being informed that the delivery of required IT equipment will be delayed. An impact assessment is a process of analyzing and evaluating how a change or an issue may affect the scope, schedule, cost, quality, or risks of a project. An impact assessment can help to determine the severity and implications of the delay on the project objectives and deliverables and identify any possible alternatives or corrective actions to minimize or avoid its negative effects.

NEW QUESTION # 357

- A. Task board
- B. Schedule
- C. Issue log
- D. Status report

Answer: C

Explanation:

An issue log is a document that records and tracks any issues that arise during a project and how they are resolved¹. It is different from a risk register, which records and tracks potential risks that may or may not occur during a project². When a risk becomes an issue, it means that it has occurred and has a negative impact on the project. Therefore, the project manager should update the issue log next to document the compliance issue, its cause, its impact, its priority, its owner, and its resolution status³. Updating the issue log will help the project manager communicate the issue to the stakeholders, monitor the progress of the mitigation plan, and prevent similar issues from happening again⁴.
