The EC-Council CCISO Body of Knowledge states that when assisting law enforcement investigations, organizations must provide accurate, relevant, and legally defensible information. The most valuable assistance is supplying IP addresses, MAC addresses, timestamps, and related log data that can help identify the source of illegal activity.
CCISO documentation emphasizes that law enforcement relies on network attribution data to correlate activity across service providers and jurisdictions. Configuration changes such as disabling SSIDs or installing firewalls do not assist investigations retroactively.
Providing precise technical identifiers supports chain-of-custody, preserves evidence integrity, and enables lawful investigation without exceeding organizational authority.
Therefore, the correct and CCISO-aligned answer is providing the IP address, MAC address, and other pertinent information.
