NEW QUESTION # 15

What is a recommended practice for configuring enforcement boundary devices in an ICS control network?

- A. Create one rule for each authorized conversation in a stateless access control list
- B. Enable full packet collection for all allowed and denied traffic rules on next-generation firewalls
- C. Create a rule which drops inbound packets containing a source address from within the protected network
- D. Use an egress policy that allows everything out except for that which is explicitly denied

Answer: B

Explanation:

Enforcement boundary devices like firewalls play a critical role in ICS network security. A best practice is to: Enable full packet collection for all allowed and denied traffic (B) on next-generation firewalls. This facilitates deep inspection, detailed logging, and auditing, which are vital for detecting anomalous or malicious activity.

Other options are less effective or counterproductive:

(A) Dropping inbound packets with source addresses from the protected network is generally illogical and may disrupt normal traffic.

(C) Stateless access control is less secure and less manageable than stateful inspection.

(D) Default allow egress policies increase risk by permitting unnecessary outbound traffic.

GICSP stresses detailed logging and stateful inspection as core security controls for enforcement points.
