ASQ Certified Manager of Quality/Organizational Excellence Exam Sample Questions (Q73-Q78):

NEW QUESTION # 73

Which of the following is an essential feature of a "pull" production system?

- A. Kanban
- B. Manufacturing resources planning (MRP)
- C. Poka-yoke
- D. Work in progress (WIP)

Answer: A

Explanation:

A pull production system operates based on actual customer demand. Production is triggered by customer orders or consumption, ensuring that products are manufactured just in time to meet market needs. This method minimizes excess inventory and reduces the risk of overproduction3. Let's explore the essential features of a pull production system in more detail:

* Supermarket Pull System: This is the most basic type of pull system. Each process has a store (often called a supermarket) that holds an amount of each product it produces. As material is withdrawn from the supermarket by the downstream customer process, a kanban or other information is sent upstream to authorize the upstream process to replace what was withdrawn. Each process is responsible for replenishing its supermarket, making daily management relatively simple. However, carrying inventory for all part numbers produced may not be feasible if the number of part numbers is large2.

* Sequential Pull System: Also known as a "b-type" pull system, this approach is used when there are too many part numbers to hold inventory of each in a supermarket. Products are essentially "made-to-order," minimizing overall system inventory. In a sequential system, the scheduling department sets the right mix and quantity of products to be produced. Each following process produces in sequence the items delivered by the preceding upstream process. FIFO (first in, first out) of individual products must be maintained throughout. This system creates pressure to maintain short and predictable lead times2.

In summary, a pull production system ensures that work starts only upon customer request, reducing waste and promoting efficient resource utilization. It aligns with the principles of Just-in-Time (JIT) production and emphasizes producing goods to meet actual demand13.

NEW QUESTION # 74

To identify product attributes that are important to customers, an organization should use which of the following techniques?

- A. Survey internal customers who understand the customers and the product
- B. gather information using field market research
- C. Analyze product performance using statistical tools
- D. Conduct simulations using returned products

Answer: B

Explanation:

Field market research is a direct method of gathering information from the end-users or consumers about their needs, preferences, and perceptions. This technique involves various methods such as surveys, interviews, observations, and focus groups to collect data on customer opinions and experiences. It is considered one of the most effective ways to understand what attributes of a product are valued by customers, as it provides firsthand insights into customer behavior and preferences. This approach allows organizations to tailor their products to better meet the needs of their target market.

References: The explanation is based on standard marketing and quality management practices that emphasize the importance of understanding customer requirements and using field market research to gather valuable customer insights. These practices are integral to the body of knowledge for the ASQ Manager Of Quality/Organizational Excellence certification.
