NEW QUESTION # 572

As the organization requires user friendly access to a new web-based application, a software developer decides to implement Single Sign-On (SSO). The developer uses the de-facto standard for web-based applications and the implementation includes the use of a JavaScript Object Notation (JSON) web token. With this information, which is the BEST way for the software developer to establish SSO capability?

- A. The developer uses Open ID Connect (OIDC) and Open Authorization (OAuth).
- B. The developer uses the user's credentials stored within the web-based application.
- C. The developer uses Transport Layer Security (TLS) certificates and Open ID Connect (OIDC).
- D. The developer Inputs the user's account, the user's password, and a token.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 573

Which of the following inventory management techniques is most responsive to changes in demand levels?

- A. Periodic review system
- B. Cycle counting
- C. ABC classification
- D. Two-bin system

Answer: A

Explanation:

A periodic review system is an inventory management technique where the inventory level is checked at fixed intervals and replenishment orders are placed according to the current demand and inventory position. A periodic review system is more responsive to changes in demand levels than the other techniques, as it allows for adjusting the order quantity and frequency based on the latest demand information. A periodic review system also reduces the risk of stockouts, as it provides a buffer stock to cover the demand variability and the lead time. A periodic review system is suitable for items that have low holding costs, high ordering costs, or unpredictable demand patterns¹². NEW QUESTION # 574

Which of the following product design approaches are likely to reduce time to market for a global supply chain?

- A. Concurrent engineering
- B. Quality function deployment (QFD)
- C. Design for logistics
- D. Design for manufacture

Answer: A

Explanation:

Concurrent engineering is a product design approach that involves the simultaneous and collaborative involvement of different functional areas, such as engineering, marketing, manufacturing, and suppliers, in the product development process. Concurrent engineering aims to reduce time to market, improve quality, lower costs, and enhance customer satisfaction by integrating and coordinating the inputs and feedback of all the stakeholders from the early stages of design. Concurrent engineering can also facilitate the standardization and modularization of product components, which can improve the flexibility and responsiveness of a global supply chain. References:
