IBM MQ v9.4 Administrator - Professional Sample Questions (Q113-Q118):

NEW QUESTION # 113

When integrating IBM MQ with a batch processing system where multiple consumers need to process the same set of messages independently, which messaging pattern should be implemented to allow multiple subscribers to receive a copy of each message while maintaining performance and scalability in the environment?

- A. Publish/Subscribe using topics and durable subscriptions
- B. Temporary queues for each batch job
- C. Clustered queues with round-robin delivery
- D. Point-to-point messaging with a single queue

Answer: A

Explanation:

The Publish/Subscribe model allows multiple subscribers to receive independent copies of messages. Durable subscriptions ensure that messages are retained even if a subscriber is temporarily unavailable, enabling reliable batch processing.

NEW QUESTION # 114

In IBM MQ, how does the use of shared queues in a cluster environment facilitate load balancing, including how multiple queue managers can process messages from a single queue, reduce bottlenecks, and ensure high availability for critical applications?

- A. Shared queues are used only for testing and do not support production environments
- B. Shared queues allow multiple queue managers in a cluster to process messages from the same queue, automatically distributing workload and improving availability
- C. Shared queues in clusters replicate messages but do not affect workload distribution
- D. Shared queues only provide backup copies of messages

Answer: B

Explanation:

Shared queues in clustered queue managers enable multiple instances to process messages from a common queue, balancing workload, reducing bottlenecks, and increasing availability for high-priority applications.

NEW QUESTION # 115

How does IBM MQ's Dead Letter Queue (DLQ) help administrators identify and manage messages that cannot reach their intended destination, and what configuration is required to ensure proper routing of these messages for analysis and recovery?

- A. DLQ captures undeliverable messages and requires setting the queue manager's DLQ name parameter to redirect these messages for further analysis.
- B. Messages are stored temporarily in memory until the target queue is available, with no permanent storage.
- C. Clustered queues automatically forward failed messages to all other queues for retry.
- D. Messages in DLQ are automatically discarded after logging an error; no configuration is needed.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The DLQ stores undeliverable messages in a designated queue, allowing administrators to analyze, troubleshoot, or reroute them, preventing message loss.

NEW QUESTION # 116

In a scenario where an application needs to send large volumes of messages across multiple geographically distributed systems while maintaining message order for each logical group, which IBM MQ feature is most suitable to handle such a requirement?

- A. Standard queues with transactional commit
- B. Priority-based messaging
- C. Message grouping and segmented messages
- D. Non-persistent message streaming

Answer: C

Explanation:

Message grouping in IBM MQ allows maintaining order for related messages while sending large volumes across distributed systems efficiently.

NEW QUESTION # 117

IBM MQ distinguishes between persistent and non-persistent messaging. In which scenario is non-persistent messaging considered appropriate, where performance outweighs durability guarantees?

- A. Banking payment instructions where every transaction is critical
- B. Legal contract records exchanged between multiple enterprises
- C. Airline booking transactions that must not be lost under any condition
- D. Live sports score updates streamed to thousands of subscribers

Answer: D

Explanation:

Non-persistent messages are suitable for use cases like live sports updates, where speed matters more than durability and losing some messages is acceptable.
