A website runs a web application that receives a burst of traffic each day at noon. The users upload new pictures and content daily, but have been complaining of timeouts. The architecture uses Amazon EC2 Auto Scaling groups, and the custom application consistently takes 1 minute to initiate upon boot up before responding to user requests.
How should a solutions architect redesign the architecture to better respond to changing traffic?

- A. Configure Amazon CloudFront to use an Application Load Balancer as the origin.
- B. Configure a Network Load Balancer with a slow start configuration.
- C. Configure an Auto Scaling step scaling policy with an instance warmup condition.
- D. Configure AWS ElastiCache for Redis to offload direct requests to the servers.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 444

A Solutions Architect must ensure that there is enough backend capacity to meet user demands. The Operations team wants to scale down as quickly as possible after the launch.
What is the MOST cost-effective and fault-tolerant solution that will meet the company's customer demands? (Choose two.)

- A. Set up an Application Load Balancer to distribute traffic to multiple EC2 instances
- B. Create an AWS Lambda function to monitor website load time, run it every 5 minutes, and use the AWS SDK to create a new instance if website load time is longer than 2 seconds
- C. Set up an Auto Scaling group across multiple Availability Zones for the website, and create scale-out and scale-in policies
- D. Use Amazon CloudFront to cache the website content during launch and set a TTL for cache content to expire after the launch date
- E. Create an Amazon CloudWatch alarm to send an email through Amazon SNS when EC2 instances experience higher loads

"It probably ends up cheaper because you can take advantage of the CDN element, caching assets like images, css, js etc on CloudFront rather than having all traffic traverse the ALB to retrieve them. If you already use a CDN for these then you may not see any cost benefit adding it into the mix.
We also use CloudFront for SSL termination of 30+ customer sites, with a single ALB serving requests to the back end. We were using a separate CDN provider but we're moving all our assets into CloudFront too because it's going to end up way cheaper."

NEW QUESTION # 445
A user wants to create a public subnet in VPC and launch an EC2 instance within it. The user has not selected the option to assign a public IP address while launching the instance.
Which of the below mentioned statements is true with respect to this scenario?

- A. The user can directly attach an elastic IP to the instance
- B. The instance will always have a public DNS attached to the instance by default
- C. The user would need to create a default route to IGW in subnet's route table and then attach an elastic IP to the instance to connect from the internet
- D. The instance will never launch if the public IP is not assigned

Answer: C

Explanation:
A Virtual Private Cloud (VPC) is a virtual network dedicated to the user's AWS account. A user can create a subnet with VPC and launch instances inside that subnet. When the user is launching an instance he needs to select an option which attaches a public IP to the instance. If the user has not selected the option to attach the public IP, then it will only have a private IP when launched. The user cannot connect to the instance from the internet. If the user wants an elastic IP to connect to the instance from the internet, he should create an internet gateway and assign an elastic IP to instance.
