Veeam Certified Engineer v12 Sample Questions (Q200-Q205):

NEW QUESTION # 200

The engineer configured Veeam Backup & Replications 3 years ago with an all-in-one physical server with one job backing up all VMs. The environment grew considerably and RPOs are no longer met.

The engineer checks the backup job and sees:

Load: Source 0% > Proxy 68% > Network 0% > Target 0%.

What should be done to decrease the backup processing time?

- A. Split the VMs in several jobs with the same schedule to process the VMs in parade
- B. Install another Veeam Backup & Replication server and move half of the VMs to be processed in a separate job
- C. Edit the Backup Job settings and enable parallel processing from Advanced options
- D. From Backup Infrastructure add an extra Windows/Linux machine as Backup Proxy

Answer: D

Explanation:

Given the proxy load of 68% and all other loads (source, network, target) at 0%, the bottleneck is at the proxy. To decrease the backup processing time and accommodate the growth of the environment, adding additional Windows or Linux machines as backup proxies would help distribute the load. This would enable parallel processing and reduce the time taken to complete the backup jobs, thereby helping to meet the RPOs.

- C. Veeam ONE can verify that the server meets the minimum requirements to install Veeam Backup & Replication.
- D. Veeam ONE stores the license file necessary for Veeam Backup & Replication.

Answer: A

Explanation:

It is recommended to install Veeam ONE before Veeam Backup & Replication because Veeam ONE can potentially identify infrastructure issues that might affect backup operations before they are performed. This proactive approach ensures that the environment is optimized for successful backup and replication tasks. - A. Create a CSV file that is scanned before the backup job starts.
- B. Enable application aware processing.
- C. Create a job based on vSphere tags.
- D. Create a dynamic backup job in Enterprise Manager.
