For what is File Based Discovery used?

- A. To discover that file names conform to a defined naming standard
- B. To discover the contents of flat files such as configuration files
- C. To discover file paths to recognize the signature of installed software
- D. To discover the checksum of a file and store it to track for changes

Answer: C

Explanation:

File Based Discovery is used to discover file paths to recognize the signature of installed software. File Based Discovery helps to identify what software is running on Windows and UNIX servers and devices by scanning the file system for specific files or directories that indicate the presence of a software product¹. File Based Discovery can also check the file size, version, and checksum of the discovered files to verify the software installation². File Based Discovery can be configured using file signatures, which are patterns that match the file paths of software products³.

NEW QUESTION # 105

On the ECC Queue, sensor records have a Queue value of _____ and probe records have a Queue value of _____.

- A. started, ready
- B. ready, started
- C. input, output
- D. output, input

Answer: D

Explanation:

On the ECC Queue, sensor records have a Queue value of output and probe records have a Queue value of input. The ECC Queue is the connection point between the instance and the MID Server, and it displays the input and output messages from and to the MID Server¹. A probe is a message that the instance sends to the MID Server to request information from a device or application². A sensor is a script that the MID Server runs to process the results returned by the probe³. When a probe is created, it is inserted into the ECC Queue with a Queue value of input, which means that it is waiting to be picked up by the MID Server⁴. When a sensor is created, it is inserted into the ECC Queue with a Queue value of output, which means that it is waiting to be processed by the instance.
