EC-COUNCIL EC Council Certified Incident Handler (ECIH v3) Sample Questions (Q116-Q121):

NEW QUESTION # 116

James has been appointed as an incident handling and response (IH&R) team lead and he was assigned to build an IH&R plan along with his own team in the company.

Identify the IH&R process step James is currently working on.

- A. Eradication
- B. Preparation
- C. Recovery
- D. Notification

Answer: B

Explanation:

In the context of incident handling and response (IH&R), the preparation phase is the initial step where teams and resources are organized to effectively respond to potential security incidents. This phase involves building the IH&R team, developing incident response plans and policies, setting up communication channels, and ensuring that the team has the necessary tools and authority to act. James, being assigned to build an IH&R plan and organize his team, is engaging in the preparation step of the incident response process. This foundational step is crucial for ensuring a coordinated and efficient response to incidents when they occur.

References: The importance of the preparation phase in the incident response lifecycle is emphasized in various cybersecurity frameworks and guidelines, including those covered in ECIH v3 certification materials, which detail the roles, responsibilities, and planning necessary to establish an effective incident response capability.
