Splunk Enterprise Certified Architect Sample Questions (Q192-Q197):

NEW QUESTION # 192

Which command will permanently decommission a peer node operating in an indexer cluster?

- A. splunk stop -f
- B. splunk offline --enforce-counts
- C. splunk offline -f
- D. splunk decommission --enforce counts

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 193

Which of the following are true statements about Splunk indexer clustering?

- A. The search head must run the same or a later Splunk version than the peer nodes.
- B. All peer nodes must run exactly the same Splunk version.
- C. The master node must run the same or a later Splunk version than search heads.
- D. The peer nodes must run the same or a later Splunk version than the master node.

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 194

What is the best method for sizing or scaling a search head cluster?

- A. Estimate the total number of searches per day and divide by the number of CPU cores available on the search heads.
- B. Divide the number of indexers by three to achieve the correct number of search heads.
- C. Estimate the maximum concurrent number of searches and divide by the number of CPU cores per search head.
- D. Estimate the maximum daily ingest volume in gigabytes and divide by the number of CPU cores per search head.

Answer: C

Explanation:

According to the Splunk blog<sup>1</sup>, the best method for sizing or scaling a search head cluster is to estimate the maximum concurrent number of searches and divide by the number of CPU cores per search head. This gives you an idea of how many search heads you need to handle the peak search load without overloading the CPU resources. The other options are false because:

* Estimating the maximum daily ingest volume in gigabytes and dividing by the number of CPU cores per search head is not a good method for sizing or scaling a search head cluster, as it does not account for the complexity and frequency of the searches. The ingest volume is more relevant for sizing or scaling the indexers, not the search heads<sup>2</sup>.

* Estimating the total number of searches per day and dividing by the number of CPU cores available on the search heads is not a good method for sizing or scaling a search head cluster, as it does not account for the concurrency and duration of the searches. The total number of searches per day is an average metric that does not reflect the peak search load or the search performance<sup>2</sup>.

* Dividing the number of indexers by three to achieve the correct number of search heads is not a good method for sizing or scaling a search head cluster, as it does not account for the search load or the search head capacity. The number of indexers is not directly proportional to the number of search heads, as different types of data and searches may require different amounts of resources<sup>2</sup>.

NEW QUESTION # 195

Which Splunk internal index contains license-related events?

- A. _internal
- B. _audit
- C. _introspection
- D. _license

Answer: A

Explanation:

The `_internal` index contains license-related events, such as the license usage, the license quota, the license pool, the license stack, and the license violations. These events are logged by the license manager in the `license_usage.log` file, which is part of the `_internal` index. The `_audit` index contains audit events, such as user actions, configuration changes, and search activity. These events are logged by the audit trail in the `audit.log` file, which is part of the `_audit` index. The `_license` index does not exist in Splunk, as the license-related events are stored in the `_internal` index. The `_introspection` index contains platform instrumentation data, such as the resource usage, the disk objects, the search activity, and the data ingestion. These data are logged by the introspection generator in various log files, such as `resource_usage.log`, `disk_objects.log`, `search_activity.log`, and `data_ingestion.log`, which are part of the `_introspection` index. For more information, see About Splunk Enterprise logging and [About the `_internal` index] in the Splunk documentation.

NEW QUESTION # 196

Which props.conf setting has the least impact on indexing performance?

- A. TRUNCATE
- B. TIME_PREFIX
- C. SHOULD_LINEMERGE
- D. CHARSET

Answer: D

Explanation:

According to the Splunk documentation<sup>1</sup>, the `CHARSET` setting in `props.conf` specifies the character set encoding of the source data. This setting has the least impact on indexing performance, as it only affects how Splunk interprets the bytes of the data, not how it processes or transforms the data. The other options are false because:

* The `SHOULD_LINEMERGE` setting in `props.conf` determines whether Splunk breaks events based on timestamps or newlines. This setting has a significant impact on indexing performance, as it affects how Splunk parses the data and identifies the boundaries of the events<sup>2</sup>.

* The `TRUNCATE` setting in `props.conf` specifies the maximum number of characters that Splunk indexes from a single line of a file. This setting has a moderate impact on indexing performance, as it affects how much data Splunk reads and writes to the index<sup>3</sup>.

* The `TIME_PREFIX` setting in `props.conf` specifies the prefix that directly precedes the timestamp in the event data. This setting has a moderate impact on indexing performance, as it affects how Splunk extracts the timestamp and assigns it to the event
