For an operating system, the CI Type should be Operating System or a subtype of it.

* Select Infrastructure Pattern Type: This defines the type of pattern that will be used to discover the CI.

For an operating system, the Infrastructure Pattern Type should be Operating System or a subtype of it.

* Define the pattern logic: This consists of adding operations, variables, and conditions to the pattern to specify how the discovery process will identify and classify the operating system. For example, the pattern can use probes and sensors to query the target device for information such as name, version, vendor, etc.

* Test and publish the pattern: This involves verifying that the pattern works as expected and does not cause any errors or conflicts with other patterns. Once the pattern is tested, it can be published and activated for discovery.
