NEW QUESTION # 314

Drag and Drop Question

Drag and drop the correct mitigation methods from the left onto the corresponding types of attack on the right.

Answer:

Explanation:

NEW QUESTION # 315

An enterprise that runs numerous proprietary applications has major issues with its on-premises server estate hardware, to the point where business-critical functions are compromised. The enterprise accelerates plans to migrate services to the cloud. Which cloud service should be used if the enterprise wants to avoid hardware issues yet have control of its applications and operating system?

- A. SaaS
- B. hybrid cloud
- C. PaaS
- D. IaaS

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 316

Company XYZ asks for design recommendations for Layer 2 redundancy. The company wants to prioritize fast convergence and resiliency elements in the design.

Which two technologies are recommended? (Choose two.)

- A. Design MLAG/MC-LAG into the network wherever possible.
- B. Configure DHCP snooping on the switches.
- C. Use root guard.
- D. Use UniDirectional Link Detection.
- E. Use BPDU guard.

Answer: A,D

NEW QUESTION # 317

The goal for any network designer is to strive to build a resilient network that adapts to changing conditions rapidly with minimal impact on the services running over the network. A resilient network can adapt to failures, but which soft failure can be harder to define and detect?

- A. A network that is not running in an optimal way
- B. A network or service that experiences outages
- C. A network with operational challenges due to lack of skills
- D. A network which does not solve complexity issues

Answer: A

Explanation:

A soft failure refers to a condition where the network continues to operate, but performance or behavior is degraded in a way that is not immediately visible or detectable-this includes suboptimal routing, misconfigured protocols, or resource inefficiencies. These are harder to define and detect because they don't cause total outages but still impact user experience or service quality. In contrast, hard failures like outages (Option D) are more visible and measurable.

This aligns with CCDE v3.1's guidance on resilience, observability, and performance-aware design, emphasizing proactive identification of non-fatal but service-impacting anomalies.

NEW QUESTION # 318

The network designer needs to use GLOP IP addresses to make them unique within their ASN. Which multicast address range will be considered?

- A. 224.0.0.0 to 224.0.0.255
- B. 233.0.0.0 to 233.255.255.255
- C. 232.0.0.0 to 232.255.255.255
- D. 239.0.0.0 to 239.255.255.255

Answer: B

Explanation:

* C: GLOP addressing is defined in RFC 2770, assigning a portion of the 233.0.0.0/8 range for each AS based on their 16-bit ASN. This allows each AS to use a /24 of globally unique multicast addresses without coordination from IANA.

Other options:

* A: 239.0.0.0/8 is the administratively scoped multicast address space.

* B: 224.0.0.0/24 is reserved for local link-scoped protocols (e.g., OSPF, RIP).

* D: 232.0.0.0/8 is the Source-Specific Multicast (SSM) range.
