- A. connecting points are available in the facility to connect laptops to the network.
- B. users take precautions to keep their passwords confidential.
- C. terminals are located within the facility in small clusters under the supervision of an administrator.
- D. terminals with password protection are located in insecure locations.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Section: Protection of Information Assets

Explanation:

Any person with wrongful intentions can connect a laptop to the network. The insecure connecting points, make unauthorized access possible if the individual has knowledge of a valid user ID and password. The other choices are controls for preventing unauthorized network access. If system passwords are not readily available for intruders to use, they must guess, introducing an additional factor and requires time. System passwords provide protection against unauthorized use of terminals located in insecure locations. Supervision is a very effective control when used to monitor access to a small operating unit or production resources.

NEW QUESTION # 98

An organization has partnered with a third party to transport backup drives to an offsite storage facility. Which of the following is MOST important before sending the drives?

- A. Creating a chain of custody to accompany the drive in transit
- B. Ensuring the drive is placed in a tamper-evident mechanism
- C. Encrypting the drive with strong protection standards
- D. Ensuring data protection is aligned with the data classification policy

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

Before sending backup drives to an offsite storage facility, the most important thing to do is to encrypt the drive with strong protection standards. This is because encryption ensures effective security where information cannot be intercepted and used to harm the organization or its customers. Encryption also protects the data from unauthorized access, modification, or deletion in case the drive is lost, stolen, or damaged during transit or storage. Encryption of backup drives is especially important for public safety organizations that handle sensitive or personally identifiable information, such as medical records, criminal records, or emergency communications.
