EC-COUNCIL EC-Council Disaster Recovery Professional (EDRP) Sample Questions (Q213-Q218):

NEW QUESTION # 213

Cameron wanted to back up the data present on his organization's server in case a disaster struck and the data was lost. The software he used created a copy of the data using block-level imaging. Which software did Cameron use?

- A. Cloud Backup
- B. Bare-metal Restore
- C. Visualization
- D. Disk Imaging

Answer: D

Explanation:

Disk Imaging software creates a block-level copy of an entire disk or partition, capturing all data, including the OS and applications, for restoration. This fits Cameron's need for a comprehensive server backup.

* Option A (Cloud Backup): Typically file-based, not block-level imaging.

* Option C (Visualization): Likely a typo for "Virtualization," which isn't backup software.

* Option D (Bare-metal Restore): A recovery process, not the software creating the image.

* EDRP v3 discusses disk imaging as a key backup method for complete system recovery (Module: Data Backup and Recovery).

NEW QUESTION # 214

James was working on a presentation for the past few weeks. Once James completed the presentation, he stored it on an external hard disk. Unfortunately, James accidentally damaged the hard drive when he was on his way for the presentation. Due to the irreversible damage, the data present on the hard drive was rendered unreadable and inaccessible. What type of data loss did James cause?

- A. Natural Disaster
- B. Logical
- C. Data Corruption
- D. Physical

Answer: D

Explanation:

Physical data loss occurs due to physical damage to storage media (e.g., James damaging the hard drive), making data unreadable, as described.

* Option A (Logical): Software or file system issues, not physical damage.

* Option B (Natural Disaster): Environmental events (e.g., flood), not accidental damage.

* Option D (Data Corruption): Data alteration, not physical inaccessibility.

* "Physical data loss results from hardware damage, such as a broken hard drive, rendering data inaccessible due to physical failure" (Module: Data Backup and Recovery, Section: Types of Data Loss).
