PMI Agile Certified Practitioner Sample Questions (Q397-Q402):

NEW QUESTION # 397

The transition of a monthly news publication from paper to digital is planned to start in the next few weeks.

There is a debate between the product owner and the development team about the initial features to be made available and the first five stages of implementation.

What should the scrum master do to address this situation?

- A. Ask the team to define the minimum marketable feature
- B. Tell the team to proceed with coding the items as currently defined.
- C. Request more clarification from the client relations team.
- D. Encourage open discussions to help the team reach agreement

Answer: D

Explanation:

The Scrum Master should facilitate open discussions between the product owner and the development team to help them align on the initial features and the first stages of implementation. By encouraging dialogue, the Scrum Master can ensure that both parties understand each other's perspectives and collaborate to find a solution that meets the goals of the project. This approach fosters a collaborative environment and ensures that everyone is aligned on what needs to be delivered, promoting shared ownership of the product's success.
