NEW QUESTION # 177

An administrator has a cluster that is RDMA-enabled, and has been tasked with configuring network segmentation with RDMA over Converged Ethernet. While attempting to make this configuration change, it is observed that the option is greyed out in Prism. Which condition needs to be resolved in order to proceed?

- A. CVM memory reservation needs to be at least 64GB.
- B. NIC cards are mixed across nodes in the cluster.
- C. Connected NIC speeds are a mix of 10Gb and 25Gb.
- D. All nodes in the cluster need two RDMA-capable NICs.

Answer: C

Explanation:

According to the Nutanix Network Configuration and RDMA guidelines, uniformity of the physical network layer is a strict requirement for enabling RDMA over Converged Ethernet (RoCE).

Specifically, Nutanix does not support mixing network cards with different speeds within the same cluster when RDMA is involved. If the cluster contains a mix of nodes where some are connected at 10 Gbps and others at 25 Gbps (or higher), the Prism interface will disable (grey out) the RDMA configuration options to prevent an unsupported or unstable fabric configuration. To resolve this and proceed with enabling RDMA network segmentation, the administrator must ensure that all RDMA-capable NICs across all nodes are operating at the same supported speed (typically 25 Gbps or higher).

One of the steps for configuring the Prism Citrix Cloud integration is to establish the connection to Citrix Cloud. To do this, you need to provide three pieces of information:

Customer ID: This is a unique identifier for your Citrix Cloud account that can be found in your profile settings2.

Client ID: This is a unique identifier for an API client that can access your Citrix Cloud account. You can create an API client in your identity and access management settings2.
