Proofpoint Certified Threat Protection Analyst Exam Sample Questions (Q43-Q48):

NEW QUESTION # 43

An analyst wants to use the Threats page in TAP Dashboard to review all messages related to a phishing campaign that contain an attachment. What is the correct method to filter these messages?

- A. Use the threat filter to set the category, grouping, and type.
- B. Select the Highlighted tab to review Notable Techniques.
- C. Type campaign: phishing & type: attachment into the search bar.
- D. Open the Impacted tab to display users exposed to a threat.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The TAP Threats page is designed for investigation by applying structured filters that constrain the dataset by threat category (e.g., phishing), grouping (e.g., campaigns), and threat type (e.g., attachment vs URL). Using the threat filter controls (A) is the most reliable, repeatable method because it leverages the dashboard's native taxonomy and ensures you are viewing only messages that meet both conditions: campaign association and attachment presence. The Impacted tab (B) is user-impact oriented and does not inherently filter to "phishing campaign + attachment"; it is used after threats are identified to see interactions. The Highlighted tab (D) is focused on notable techniques and analyst-marked items rather than campaign scoping. While the search bar can be useful for pivots, the most "documented workflow" approach for consistent IR triage is applying the built-in threat filters, which also supports sharing consistent views across analysts and generating stable results for incident notes and reporting. This is aligned with Proofpoint IR operational practice: filter # pivot into details # scope recipients # take remediation actions.

NEW QUESTION # 44

At a minimum, which three people should attend a post-incident debrief? (Select three.)

- A. Incident managers and support staff that worked on this issue
- B. Problem manager responsible for root-cause analysis
- C. Security architect or CTO who is responsible for product or service redesign
- D. Users directly affected by the incident
- E. Human resources manager to manage the employee incident experience
- F. MFA administrator to implement any necessary changes

Answer: A,B,C

Explanation:

A post-incident debrief is primarily about extracting lessons, validating timelines/decisions, and translating findings into durable engineering and process changes. The minimum effective set includes: (A) the incident managers and responders who executed the investigation and containment, because they own the factual timeline, evidence, and decision points; (C) the problem manager responsible for root-cause analysis, because they drive structured RCA (contributing factors, control gaps, "5 whys") and track corrective actions; and (D) the security architect/CTO (or equivalent design authority), because long-term remediation often requires architectural or policy redesign (email authentication enforcement, safer mail routing, TAP/TRAP automation, identity hardening, logging/retention improvements). In Proofpoint-centered incidents (phish # ATO # internal spread), durable fixes commonly require cross-system changes: DMARC alignment, safer supplier controls, stricter URL/attachment policy, and automated post-delivery remediation. HR, affected users, or MFA admins may be involved depending on the incident type, but they are not the minimum required for a technically complete debrief focused on prevention and improved response capability.

NEW QUESTION # 45

Which of the following is a useful training exercise for security analysts?

- A. Vulnerability scanning
- B. Updating standard operating procedures
- C. Incident response tabletop
- D. Network port scanning

Answer: C

Explanation:

An incident response tabletop (A) is a structured scenario-based exercise where analysts practice decision-making, communications, evidence handling, and coordinated response under realistic constraints. In Proofpoint-focused IR, tabletops are particularly valuable because email-led incidents require cross-team handoffs: SOC triage (TAP), mail admin actions (policy changes, Smart Search validation), post-delivery remediation (TRAP quarantine/pull), identity containment (password resets, token revocation, MFA), and business escalation (finance verification for BEC). Tabletop drills validate that playbooks are executable, escalation contacts are correct, and the team can meet response SLAs (time-to-triage, time-to-contain). They also expose tooling gaps (missing mailbox audit logs, insufficient retention, lack of automation for retroactive search/pull). Updating SOPs is important but is documentation work, not a training exercise by itself.

Vulnerability scanning and port scanning are security assessment activities and can support overall security posture, but they do not train analysts on the incident response lifecycle behaviors (triage, containment coordination, post-incident lessons learned) that drive effective real-world response.

NEW QUESTION # 46

Which TAP Reports tab provides a view of the distribution of threats against your organization, including quantity of messages, variation of threat campaigns seen, and the number of individual threats that weren't part of a campaign?

- A. Objectives
- B. Organization
- C. Landscape
- D. Effectiveness

Answer: C

Explanation:

The "Landscape" report (A) is designed to summarize the overall threat distribution against the organization- how much malicious mail is being seen, what categories dominate (phish/malware/impostor), how many distinct campaigns are active, and how many threats appear as one-offs (not clustered into campaigns). In Proofpoint-driven detection and analysis, this view supports strategic triage and posture assessment: it helps a SOC understand whether they are facing broad commodity spam/phishing, a few concentrated campaigns, or many unique targeted attacks. It also informs resource planning (analyst workload), control tuning (URL /attachment policies), and targeted mitigations (blocklists, stricter policies for high-risk groups).

"Effectiveness" typically focuses on outcomes (blocked vs delivered, prevented clicks, remediation success),

"Objectives" aligns to attacker goals (credential theft, malware delivery, BEC), and "Organization" is commonly more about organizational breakdowns (departments, user groups, VIPs). For incident response planning, the Landscape tab provides the "what are we facing overall" context that helps prioritize prevention initiatives and define detection coverage gaps.

NEW QUESTION # 47

What are two unique benefits of submitting false positives via the support portal? (Select two.)

- A. Automatic correction to label the threat as a false positive
- B. Feedback on the false positive submission
- C. Quick reputation check on the message contents
- D. Generating a complaint to the TAP product manager
- E. Human review of the false positive claim

Answer: B,E

Explanation:

Submitting false positives through the Proofpoint support portal provides (C) human review and (D) feedback-two benefits that materially improve long-term operational quality. Human review adds expert validation beyond automated engines, which is critical when legitimate business mail is misclassified due to language patterns, new domains, unusual attachment types, or atypical sending infrastructure. The support workflow also returns feedback that helps the customer understand why the system condemned the message and what tuning steps are appropriate (policy adjustments, safe sender entries, authentication alignment, supplier allow-listing). This differs from purely local labeling, which may not propagate improvements broadly or may not be examined by Proofpoint analysts. "Automatic correction" is not guaranteed and can vary by product and configuration; support submissions are primarily a review-and-learn loop rather than an immediate auto-fix. Generating complaints is not a product feature, and "quick reputation checks" can be done within dashboards, but the support portal's value is the structured escalation path: it improves detection fidelity over time, reduces recurring business disruption, and strengthens SOC processes for handling disputes in a documented, auditable manner.
